Sept 27, Oct 25, Jan 22, Mar 13 | Wildwood School

This program is an opportunity for educators committed to the work of diversity, equity and inclusion to develop an understanding of practices and strategies to navigate their school community and institutional structure to affect change. Participants will use the latest research and facilitated discussion to explore a range of topics, such as racial literacy, gender diversity, socio-economic inclusion, hiring and retention strategies for underrepresented groups, multicultural curricula, and inclusive instructional practices. Ultimately, participants will consider the interplay between organizational/institutional structures and best practices/strategies, recognizing that effective leadership in the field of diversity and inclusion is context- and community-specific. Through this year-long series, participants will:

- Explore the many facets of multicultural and diversity responsive curricula and communities;
- Develop new skills and explore school-wide strategies for promoting diversity and inclusivity, based on current research and best practices;
